An online tool for collaborative decision-making

Loomio empowers communities, social movements and organizations to co-create a thriving and equitable future.
Loomio goes beyond discussion forums, endless email chains, and majority-rules polling, with a consensus-building process that empowers groups to build shared understanding and arrive at clear outcomes.

- Discuss
- Decide
- Act

Loomio is a powerfully simple concept: An online space enabling groups to come together, talk about an issue and agree on a course of action.
First, talk things through
Start a discussion on any topic. Bring in the right people. Share diverse perspectives and develop ideas together.
Next, build agreement
Anyone can propose a course of action and engage the group in a decision. You can see how everyone feels, and why.
Then, decide together
Develop your thinking together, addressing any concerns that arise. Arrive at a decision that works for everyone.
Decisions can take many forms

- Every member has a steward.
- Every new contributor has a steward. By default, this will be the person who added them.
- Eventually everyone who wants one will have a steward.

The Power of Asynchrony

Scale: Hear more people than you could in a single room or meeting.

Distance: Contribute from anywhere.

Time: To digest and reconsider. To comment after school or the kids are in bed.

Space: For those who are soft-spoken.

Fluidity: Move between decision making groups with ease, participate in many places.
What you are internally defines your impact externally.
Loomio beta has been adopted by thousands of change-making organizations, communities and social movements.

In Spain, 27,000 citizens joined Loomio to connect a nationwide grassroots network to a rapidly growing political party.

Wikimedia Foundation’s head office moved off a messy email list and into Loomio, enabling collaborative decisions with 180 staff.

Harvard Law students and faculty used Loomio to build a student movement around the treatment of sexual misconduct on campus.

The City of Provo, Utah, is using Loomio to foster increased community participation in city government.

“Loomio is user friendly and well designed to improve debate and arrive at better consensus.”
